BY THOMAS DAVIS, THE IRISH POET. Sweet thoughts, bright dreams, my comfort be, All comfort else has flown; For every hope was fulse to me, And here I am, alone What thoughts were mine in early youth !

Like some old Irish song, Brimful of love, of life, and truth, My spirit guished along. I hoped to right my native isle,

I hoped a soldier's fame, I hoped to rest in woman's smile, And win a minstrel's name. Oh! little have I served my land, No laurels press my brow. I have no woman's heart or hand,

Nor minstrel honors now. But fancy has a magic power, It brings no wreath nor crown. But woman's love, the self-same hour,

It smites oppression down Sweet thoughts bright dreams, my comfort be,

I have no joy beside; Oh! throng around, and be to me Power, country, fame, and bride.
